Title : Ad Hominem Fallacy

This paragraph discusses the fallacy known as ad homine in which a person attacks another instead addressing argument. It contains a story about a young lawyer Lincoln. He smartly use ad hominem in one of his first t jury cases. His opponent was an experienced and confident lawyer, who won many legal cases. In that day case seems to be against Lincoln. When the opponent took off his coat he was wearing a new-slicker shirt which buttoned up back. Lincoln noticed that and in his turn he said that the opponent is just acting to have knowledge of law. He doesn't even know which side of shirt ought to be in front. Lincoln won the jury. This fallacy has existed for a long time and continue in modern politics.

Translation

I wish we could go back ~~and~~ to the days of playing Gali danda, searching for hidden treasure and hide and seek. If those old days come back then we would feel that happiness and carefree again. we would run and laugh with our friends in those streets and forget our small fights. Today, those days just remained as ^{memories} ~~moments~~ and the heart feels absence of those moments when the life was simple, happy and carefree.
