PARAGRAPH WRITING: "US-China Trade War"

US tariffs were designed to down Chinese exports, causing economic pain to China. This strategic geopolitical move decreased Chinese exports in shipments to US by 15% in 2025. However, the story beyond America is starkly different. Though US hit Chinese exports, but tariffs not its global dominance. Chinese export focus shifted to countries in Europe, Africa, Southeast Asia and Latin America supplying EV brands, heavy machinery and high-tech goods to the increasing demands in countries like Germany, Italy, France, Brazil, Chile and Brussels. Whereas, US alliances shifted to Japan, Korea and Europe. The road ahead to the negotiation between US and China seems standstill. Resultantly, China is not only weathering the storm but also strengthening its global economic position. Whereas, US grapples in inflation due to China's twin strategy of halting exports of rare earths and stopping purchase of soybeans, facing political backlash at home.
