

If wants were horses even beggars would ride

The proverb "If wants were horses even beggars would ride" ~~the~~ means if you want to have something or you are wishing for something, you must ~~need to~~ work for it, to ^{achieve} achieve it without effort one can not achieve their desires. Only wishing it is not enough, even ^{beggars} beggars can wish a lot of things to have bank balance a ^{luxurious} luxurious life, but without efforts desires, are of no value. If someone wants to ride a horse they must have it. Money resources are necessary for achieving dreams but some desires are unrealistic, e.g. ~~wishing to change~~ ~~your past or have a good health when~~ ~~you are unhealthy~~, some wishes can not be ^{fulfilled} fulfill ^{even if} although you have money or resources. Therefore, all the needs and wants can not be ^{achieved} achieve at once. Some desires that you achieve without working lose their charm. The process of working for a desire gives you more satisfaction than only wishing for it.

Spelling and grammatical errors found. Cohesion is missing.