Oracles in GreecePrecis

Humans ^{felt} weak in comparison with the vastness of nature and mysteries of life, so they ^{sought} to communicate with the divine.

Knowledge of God's wishes always guided human behavior. In ancient Greece, soothsayers who could interpret signs from gods, helped humans understand divine wishes.

They interpreted various natural or ritual signs to reveal god's will.

Sometimes, gods did not speak through signs to the faithful, but directly to an intermediary who entered an unusual state of mind.

to deliver the message to the monland. These were the methods that formed the basis of future foresight in ancient Greece. Each oracle was located in a proper sanctuary connected directly with one or other of the gods to convey divine will.
