

Education is the backbone of a strong nation

Education is the backbone of a strong nation because it shapes skilled, informed and responsible citizens. A country's political stability, economic progress and well-social structure depends on educated people.
Through education, individual learns critical thinking technical skills and moral values. Those nations

Educated citizens contributed in innovations, productivity, learning and good governance, while illiteracy brings poverty, unemployment, extremism and social disorder. Moreover,

Education promotes tolerance and nation unity by encouraging respect to diversity and rule of law. Nations that invest heavily in education such as Japan and South-Korea have transformed their limited resources to sustainable development. Therefore, without a strong education system no nation can compete globally and ensure long-term prosperity.
