The Impacts of Climate on Human Nature

The author believes that in temperate countries of Northern Europe the cold climate is favourable for human progress. Because it activates the human potential. But intense cold makes one inactive and intense hot climate offers little motivation for hardwork. So the moderate cold is effective as it has motivating effect on man. In the temperate cold regions, man works hard to secure food and other provisions of life. Contrarily, in tropical regions much less effort is required to sustain life. Like the temperate and tropical climates, different seasons have different impacts on human nature.

In Summer, One remains

Stress free while in winter
One works hard both mentally and physically.

A Filmmaker's Stance on Israeli Annexation

A Palestinian filmmaker Nizar Hassan produced a film "Independence" which was a mockery of Israel's concept of independence. When world's attention was towards Israel's annexation of Palestine, the writer received an email from him in which he mentioned a link of his new production "My Grandfather's Path." The writer emphasized that Palestinian art and cinema might be fruitful in Palestine movement and could prevent one from politics trap. He praised the latest production of Nizar Hassan which has put palestine in perspective when needed. He remarked that it would have impacts if watched entirely without breaks.
