

Feminism in the modern world: Has true gender equality been achieved?

Outline:

1. Introduction:

Thesis statement: Undoubtedly, gender equality has not been achieved in the modern world. The world has been facing enormous gender pay gap, workplace discrimination, gender based violence, cultural domination, stereotypes so on and so forth. Therefore, true gender equality has not been achieved in the modern world.

2. Gender equality has not been achieved in the modern world: (Thesis)

- 2.1 Enormous gender pay gap
- 2.2 Individuals are facing workplace discrimination
- 2.3 Gender based violence still exists
- 2.4 Cultural dominations have threatened the freedom
- 2.5 Stereotypes against genders have harmed equality

3. Gender equality has been achieved in the modern world: (Anti-thesis)

- 3.1 Genders have equal access to opportunities
- 3.2 Anti-workplace discrimination laws have been introduced
- 3.3 Gender based violence has been reduced
- 3.4 The spread of education has reduced the influence of culture over genders

3.5 Genders have equal access to every profession

4. Feminism has not achieved true gender equality in the modern world: (Synthesis)

4.1 men have paid more than women

4.2 Gender protection laws have introduced but never implemented

4.3 Gender based violence has reduced in developed countries rather than developing

4.4 many countries have the highest illiteracy rate

4.5 Stereotypes vary from country to country

5. Conclusion

"I am Malala" Malala Yousafzai, an author of explored the real progress of gender equality. Malala argued in the last chapters of the book that world had never achieved true gender equality. According to Malala, individuals have been discriminated on the basis of sex, color and appearance. Individuals have been burnt alive, raped and tortured. Malala concluded the book with painful reality of the existing world. Undoubtedly, same is the case with the current situation of the world. True gender equality has not been achieved in the modern world.

The world has been facing enormous gender pay gap, workplace discrimination, gender based violence, stereotypes and cultural domination. However, many people argue that true gender equality has been achieved in the world. Genders have equal access to opportunities. Also, anti-workplace laws have been introduced. These laws have reduced gender based violence and cultural domination. Apart from the opponents stance, the world has never achieved true gender equality. Men have been paid more than women and gender protection laws have never been fully implemented. Gender based violence has reduced in developed countries rather than developing nations. Therefore, the world has never achieved true gender equality.