"Ephialtes: A Justified Villian"

Villians were rarely justified in the movies, watched by the author. But Ephialtes, a villian from action film 300, was not wicked. His disloyalty to Leonidas was justified in his being rejected twice. He was a disabled Spartan. Spartans, as innate soldiers, were used to execute such a child. Therefore, Ephialtes's parents instead of killing their beloved son, flew from Sparta. His father trained him to be a soldier. So that, he may be accepted by Spartans one day. Notwithstanding his great weaponry skills, Leonidas disapproved him even for a suicidal mission against Persians. Leonidas alleged, his disable body was unabled to defend his adjacent fellows. This rejection provoked the despondent Ephialte to join Persian army to defeat the Spartans. According to author, if given a chance by Spartans, he would inflict a crushing defeat upon Persians. Thus he was not a betrayal.
