(15+5=20)

The issue of Schengen countries rejecting visa applications from Pakistani citizens is akin to preparing for a high-profile event, only for the host to shut the door saying, "Your outfit's crease isn't perfect." Applying for a Schengen visa feels like packaging your dreams into a file and presenting them to the world, yet the response often suggests you've attempted the world's biggest conspiracy. "Your documents were incomplete," "Your bank balance seems suspicious," or "Your intentions don't seem right"—these remarks feel as if a teacher had dismissed a student's exam without reading it, declaring, "This one's bound to fail."

On the other hand, if a citizen from a Western country seeks a Pakistani visa, we roll out the red carpet. "Come, enjoy our culture, savor our biryani, and don't forget to lecture us about our problems on your way back!" Perhaps Schengen countries think Pakistani citizens will cause upheaval across Europe, even though half our energy is spent paying visa fees and submitting endless documents. If granted a visa, the rest of it is exhausted contemplating, "Why did we even come here?"

Schengen countries need to realize that Pakistani citizens are human too, not some dangerous extraterrestrial beings. Perhaps they'll understand this when they themselves stand in line for a Pakistani visa someday.
