Title:

An Effective Way of Treating Children

The writer believes that modern educationist wrongly emphasize on not engaging with children rather than enjoying their company. If elders give unconditional love to children they will respond positively to even instructions. Teachers having instinct liking for children will interfere only when needed and without causing negative impact. The problem is that over-burdened teachers cannot feel this sort of love for children. The interaction of teacher with children should not more than two hours daily. Necessary friendliness helps and unnecessary pre-planned rules should be avoided. The writer

Concludes that if the child feels innate love from elders then even impulse will lead to the right decision and no rules can substitute such love.
