

Body Paragraph

Education can be a helpful tool to eliminate corruption.

Education is an essential tool to eliminate corruption as it empowers individuals with knowledge while developing ethical values and promoting accountability within society. This is because education equips individuals with critical thinking skills and an understanding of moral principles, enabling them to challenge corrupt practices and advocate for transparency and justice. A recent study titled "The Role of Corruption Education in Combating Corruption Comes in the Future" (2023) emphasizes that integrating anti-corruption education from primary to tertiary levels is crucial for reducing future corruption. Hence, education is the key to eliminate corruption and foster a society of integrity and transparency.

Illiterate voting makes democracy a dysfunctional system of governance.

Illiterate voting makes democracy a dysfunctional system of governance by (provid) preventing voters from fully understanding policies and making well-informed choices. The reason is that without literacy skills, voters are more vulnerable to manipulation and misinformation, which can influence their voting decisions leading to unwise electoral decisions. Illiterate voters cannot choose visionary leadership and hold them accountable for their misdeeds. According to Democracy Index 2023 report, the Economist Intelligence Unit (EIU), Pakistan has been downgraded to an "authoritarian regime", registering the greatest deterioration of any country in its democratic status. Hence, enhancing literacy and political awareness is important to preserve the strength and functionality of democracy.

It is totally fine to outgrow people.

Thesis statement:

"Outgrowing people is a natural part of personal growth as values and priorities evolve. While it may involve difficult decisions, it is essential for building healthy connections. This process ultimately enables individuals to align their lives with their aspirations and achieve greater fulfillment." (No. of words: 43)

Body paragraph:

In the journey of life, it is inevitable to outgrow certain people as we evolve through different stages of personal growth. Human relationships are dynamic, shaped by shared values, goals, and emotional compatibility. However, as individuals mature and redefine their priorities, they may find themselves diverging from those who once played pivotal roles in their lives. For example, friendships formed during adolescence often evolve around shared interests. However, as people enter adulthood, their perspectives broaden and their aspirations change. An individual pursuing higher education or professional success may naturally drift apart from a friend who chooses a different path. This divergence, while painful, is necessary for encouraging personal development and is a natural part of growing up. In this sense, outgrowing people is not an end but a transformative process that enables individuals to embrace new opportunities and relationships better suited to their current and future selves.
