Q. 2. Write a précis of the following passage and suggest a suitable title:

On the question of freedom in education there are at present three main schools of thought, deriving partly from differences as to ends and partly from differences in psychological theory. There are those who say that children should be completely free, however bad they may be; there are those who say they should be completely subject to authority, however good they may be; and there are those who say they should be free, but in spite of freedom they should be always good. This last party is larger than it has any logical right to be; children, like adults, will not all be virtuous if they are all free. The belief that liberty will ensure moral perfection is a relic of Rousseauism, and would not survive a study of animals and babies. Those who hold this belief think that education should have no positive purpose, but should merely offer an environment suitable for spontaneous development. I cannot agree with this school, which seems to me too individualistic, and unduly indifferent to the importance of knowledge. We live in communities which require co-operation, and it would be utopian to expect all the necessary co-operation to result from spontaneous impulse. The existence of a large population on a limited area is only possible owing to science and technique; education must, therefore, hand on the necessary minimum of these. The educators who allow most freedom are men whose success depends upon a degree of benevolence, self-control, and trained intelligence which can hardly be generated where every impulse is left unchecked; their merits, therefore, are not likely to be perpetuated if their methods are undiluted. Education, viewed from a social standpoint, must be something more positive than a mere opportunity for growth. It must, of course, provide this, but it must also provide a mental and moral equipment which children cannot acquire entirely for themselves.

Q. 3. Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions given at the end.

Precis

Q#2

On the question of entirely for -themselves.

Title: Role of education in the growth of children

The discourse around freedom in education involves three opinions. First argues that emancipate children even if they are bad while second ones want children to be controlled even if they are good. The third school opines that children should be free and good as well. Last school believes education should passively internalize growth. The Author disagrees with these people as it overshadow the importance of knowledge. People require collaboration which needs active participation. Moreover, men cannot be trained if their aggression is overlooked. Therefore, education must play its positive role. Education should deliver tools for cognitive development of children which they cannot attain without education.

Translation

An old man told that there is a mountain across the forest where that flower grows, whose scent recovers the lost eyesight. But the mountain is too high with numerous rocks, thorny bushes and large sized stones which impede path. Many people came and left to climb this mountain, but no one ever reached the flower. Perhaps this is why there is sorrow and suffering in the world, and humans are in search of light.
