

Significance of Universities' Education

The practical goal of university education is to make an individual fit for the world. It is neither the name of acquiring particular profession nor to create heroes. It is evident that most of the famous personalities have not associated with universities but they performed exceptionally well. The goal of university training is not to make people professionals only but its goal is to; increase the societal intellectual tone, purifying national taste, and inspiring public mindset. Also, through this education, a person becomes logically and morally judgemental. It further provides guidance about relevancy and irrelevancy of things. So, it then makes a person professionally sound.

Total words in Passage : Approx. 298

Total words in Precis : Approx. 105