

most of them

Pakistani Women Have Equal Chances as Men

To conclude, women empowerment in Pakistan is not a practical reality but a theoretical belief. Women are serving at different levels in education department but their number is significantly lower compared to their male counterparts. Women are highly encouraged to enter in the medical field but most of them end up leaving their profession after marriage due to societal pressure and gender-specific roles. Majority ^{women} contribute to their citizenship roles but they vote under the influence of their partners. In politics, many notable examples exist, but their number is minimal. Women empowerment is also claimed in legal sector, however, ^{mostly} they don't get acceptance in the male-dominated society. Similarly, in Business arena, women empowerment is still a distant dream. In media and literary, their work is notable but they are ~~neither~~ neither encouraged to enter in media nor ~~seen~~ ~~get~~ get desired respect. Hence, the notion that ~~Pakistani~~ ~~women~~ women have equal representation as men ~~is~~ is not a practical reality. To shape this dream into reality, certain steps are ^{still} required to ensure women empowerment in Pakistan.