

Your outline is fine but arguments can be further better

Date 20
M T W T F S S

While mentioning evidences in your points mention in all the arguments

Be very careful about grammatical errors

- Outline
1. Evolution of global marriage trends
 2. Alarming statistics of OECD countries
 3. Thesis statement

B. Causes of Delayed Marriages

1. Pursuit of higher education
2. Career ambitions and financial stability
 - a) Example of South Korea's intense job market competition
3. Rising cost of living and weddings
 - a) 45% of young adults in Japan delay marriage due to inflation
4. Changing social and cultural norms
 - a) Example of cohabitation in Scandinavian countries
5. Lack of compatible partners
 - a) Case of "leftover women" phenomenon in China
6. Religious Constraints
 - a) Example of Middle eastern sectarian preferences

Rephrase this points again this is cultural or social constraint

C. Consequences of Delayed Marriages

1. Mental health challenges and social isolation
 - a) A study of UK found over 35 percent single face higher anxiety.
2. Reduced fertility and reproductive health risks.
 - a) Report of CDC (U.S.A)
3. Demographic imbalance
 - a) Aging population in Italy and Germany

4. Social Stigma

a, Example of Indian unmarried women.

5. Delayed interpersonal and emotional development

6. Transformation of family structures

a, Introduction of nuclear family model in U.S.A and Europe

D. Conclusion

Essay

There once lived a young man named Adeel in a bustling city-hardworking, ambitious, and deeply aware of his responsibilities. Despite reaching the so-called "ideal" age for marriage, he continued to postpone it - not out of disinterest, but because financial constraints weighed heavily on him. With an unstable income, rising living costs, and a sense of obligation to build a secure future before settling down, marriage became less of a priority and more of an uncertainty. Adeel's struggle is not unique; rather, it echoes a quiet but growing global trend where marriage is no longer seen as the first step into adulthood, but often the last. This shift is emblematic of how global marriage patterns have evolved over the past decades. Where marriage was once a rite of passage tied closely to age and tradition, today it is more often delayed in favour of education, financial independence, and personal growth.

According to OECD, the average age of marriage has risen to approximately 30 for men and 28 for women in many developed nations - a significant departure from past generations. It is within this changing landscape that delayed marriage broadly defined as marrying significantly later than societal expectations - has emerged as a norm rather than expectation exception. This phenomenon is not caused by a single factor but by an intricate web of modern pressures and ambitions. Key among these are the pursuit of higher education, career ambitions, financial insecurity, and the rising cost of living expenses and weddings. However, while the motivation behind delayed marriage are often rational and grounded in real challenges, the repercussions are not always benign. This trend is increasingly associated with a range of deleterious consequences, such as mental health strain, reduced fertility, social alienation and stigma and delayed emotional and relational development. This essay seeks to explore the evolving causes and far-reaching consequences of delayed marriage in the contemporary society.