

Corruption in Pakistan

Many of the communities, kingdoms and eventually the nation states have been the victim of unscrupulous leaders and officials. History tells one of the negative consequences of corrupt officials and their actions. Unfortunately, Pakistan is no foreigner to this predicament. The founder of Pakistan, Quaid-e-Azam, only could guide the citizens the first two years. Pakistan got its first constitution after 4 years of its inception. The political vacuum created gave leaders to take arbitrary actions for personal gains, which set a sorry tradition. Moreover, the judiciary known as the guardian of the constitution also took steps on basis of friendship as in the Maulvi Tameez Uddin vs Governor General case rather than protecting the Constitutional Assembly which had the responsibility of framing the first constitution. Military intervention and martial law held the constitution of 1973 in abeyance. Politicians focused on short term goals to win election and not long term goals for the betterment of their country. Pakistan lacked solid leadership after Quaid-e-Azam and many people in

been the victim of unscrupulous leaders and officials. History tells one of the negative consequences of corrupt officials and their actions. Unfortunately, Pakistan is no foreigner to this predicament. The founder of Pakistan, Quaid-e-Azam, only could guide the citizens for the first two years. Pakistan got its first constitution after 4 years of its inception. The political vacuum created gave leaders to take arbitrary actions for personal gains, which set a sorry tradition. Moreover, the judiciary known as the guardian of the constitution also took steps on basis of friendship as in the Maulvi Tameez Uddin vs Government of Punjab case rather than protecting the Constitutional Assembly which had the responsibility of framing the first constitution. Military intervention and martial law held the constitution of 1973 in abeyance. Politicians focused on short-term goals to win elections and not long-term goals for the betterment of their country. Pakistan lacked solid leadership after Quaid-e-Azam and many people in

1

