

2017 Translation.

To truly know our hidden flaws, it is important to pay attention to what our enemies think about us. Our friends praise us to please our heart. Either they don't see our flaws as flaws, or they care so much about our feelings that they hide them to avoid hurting us, or they simply choose to ignore them. On other hand, our enemy examines us thoroughly to find out our flaws. Though they may make a mountain out of a molehill exaggerate small things, but still, there's usually some truth in what they say. A friend usually praises his friend's virtues, while an enemy highlights their flaws. So, we should be more thankful to our enemy because they help us see our faults. Seen from this perspective, an enemy can be more helpful than a friend.

Jurd 7/10.