

EXERCISE No. 6

There is a third benefit of exploration ^{investigation} that belongs more to the physical than the mental explorer, that is, general mastery over oneself by the ^{often do something} ~~habit~~ ^{habit}, ~~custom~~ ^{tradition} ~~ignorance~~ ^{Practical} either to ~~praise~~ or ~~criticize~~ hardships without realizing the difference between them. It seems to me that the essence of the matter is whether they are voluntary or optional ^{fundamentally/basically/essentially} ~~automatic/unconscious~~ ~~involuntary~~. To be given a cold bath is not a merit in itself; to take one voluntarily is quite a different matter. The explorer deals with the ~~fortunes~~ ^{chance} of life in rather the same ~~soul/emotions and characters~~ ^{spirit}. He says, "I am not going to let life ~~trample~~ ^{destruction} on me; I am going to ~~trample~~ ^{destruction} on myself and what is more I am going to do it for fun." This, in its measure, is a triumph ^{victory} over life and death and time.

Questions:

1. What is the third benefit of exploration?
2. What are the two kinds of hardships that the writer mentions?
3. Which kind of hardships does the explorer accept?
4. What is the attitude of the explorer towards hardships?
5. What the passage is about?

Exercise No 6

Use your own vocabulary as much as possible, without borrowing phrases from the original passage.

Ans ①

The third benefit of exploration is the physical move to than the mental exploration. It is a general mystery over oneself by the customs and disregard of hardships.

Answer should be 5-7 lines long.

Ans ②

The writer mentions two different kinds of hardship. In the first one, people often praises or in second they often condemn hardships without realizing the difference between them.

Ans 3

The explorer accepts a hardship of fortunes in life rather than the same spirit. The explorer says, "I am not going to let life trample on me; I am going to trample on myself and what is more I am going to do it for fun." This, in its measure, is a triumph over life and death and time.

Do not use direct narration.

Ans 4

The attitude of the explorer towards hardship is that he deals with the fortunes of life in rather the same spirit. He says, "I am not going to let life trample on me; I am going to trample on myself and what is more I am going to do it for fun." This, in its measure, is a triumph over life and death and time.

Ans 5

The passage is about the third benefit of exploration which belongs more to the physical than the mental explorer. People often praise or condemn the hardships.

Hardship is basically voluntary or involuntary. The explorer deals with the fortunes of life in rather the same spirit. He measures, his triumph over life and death and time.