

Properly deconstruct the topic You have diverted from the

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever" means that beauty whether of human, things or nature put a lasting impact on person and becomes the eternal joy. Similarly, the things people learn through life experiences always remain in their memory. They serve as a rulebook that affects their actions and dealings. As life continues to be going, the more and more experiences, knowledge and sagacity added up to the individual's character and shape the personality. Whatever personality whether a weak, strong or clumsy showcase the different history of experiences that left a deep imprint. It depends on a person how he derives the pleasure from these experiences. There are various examples of people like Thomas Edison and Barack Obama who turned the pain into pleasure through learning from their failures and ultimately gain success. Edison did thousands of experiments to make a bulb which failed. He remained consistent and learnt through each failed experience, and resultantly, succeeded to invent a bulb. Barack Obama became the first Black President of the United States when the Black were considered inferior and burden over the White. He got the Noble Peace Prize in 2009. They are some of the people who have derived the eternal joy due to their hardwork, which made them alive today.