

Freedom in Education

Freedom in Education has three main viewpoints based on differences of goals and psychological theory. The first one believes in complete liberty and the other believes in complete submission, regardless of behaviour. The third one favors freedom with condition of being always good, which is not logical. The belief that liberty only ~~can~~ ensure morality is condemned by observations of animals and children. They think education is only provider of good environment for success. According to author, this viewpoint neglects the importance of knowledge and need of cooperation. Because education also provide tools for mental and moral guidance.
