

Governance is the process of decision-making for the fulfilment of national interests. However, Pakistani governance for the last 77 years has faced economic struggle, failure of institutions, and social injustice. There are politicians, bureaucrats, and the judiciary who have wielded power with arrogance no humility. These people work for their own interests and have prioritized their own needs over Pakistan. The reason why Pakistan is in crises is that fundamental failure of leadership behind all problems. Throughout history, politicians have promised to the public to fulfil their needs and gave them opportunities, allowing these individuals to take advantage of their power to accumulate wealth. These politicians or individuals, some settled abroad after spreading the issue throughout system; others again used the backdoor dealing with establishments. In Pakistan, leaders have lived a luxury life, and nations are struggling to meet their basic needs. Therefore, the cycle of self-serving policies and power-hungry has still exist, and their nation have stuck in deep sea of instability and poverty. So, a way forward is only that powers must be accountable; otherwise, no improvements have come in Pakistan. Second, Pakistan needs a good leaders for improvements in governance structure.
