Precis Paragraph

~~Title~~

use marker for title

The Interdependence of Human Existence and society.

Human beings within society, highlighting that our actions, desires, and knowledge are largely shaped by our interactions with others. It points out that we rely on the products and labor of others for foods, clothing, housing and language.

The author argues that without societal influence and the capacity for language, individuals would remain uncivilized and primitive.

Ultimately, an individual's identity and significance emerge not solely from personal traits but significantly from their role within a larger human community that guides their physical and spiritual development throughout life.
