

* Like millions of Pakistani students, I too, often think about the state of our education system. I chase grades, remembering, memorising dates and formulas, which I forget the other day. I don't understand, whether I am learning or just passing the exams. Our education system prioritizes marks, students are embedded with notes for cramming. It's not just me, but a story of countless other students like me. Our education system overshadowed curiosity. Change is possible. Teachers could encourage students to question, not to silence them. Practical projects could replace the old cycle of exams, letting us explore & create. Well, the Youth of Pakistan deserve a system that fuels our potential, not trap us in a wheel of memorization. The nation's future depends on our youth, let us demand a learning atmosphere, where learning means growth, not just passing.
