Modern man uses his intelligence in the service of love and kindness for protection. It requires training to develop empathy. The tool of training build social morality and responsibility to increase the chance of living. It is vital to produce humans with morally sensitive intelligence, but remains challenge for the education system. In the past, religion and Churches were guardians of social morality, but their failure due to attraction of wealth and power over last two thousands years. It led rise of irrelevant theological idea like 'God is Dead'. Practical individuals/humans ignore the basic problem of social morality, believing that 'no power is morality'. This belief increase the risk of nuclear destruction. The hope is that educators must be committed to developing moral sensitivity as an integral part of human intelligence. Training must also foster love, kindness, and the integrity needed for functional empathy.
