Title: Balancing Liberty and Education

Precis:

The author identifies three views on education freedom: total liberty regardless of behaviour, strict authority regardless of goodness and liberty with moral behaviour. He criticized the third, noting that liberty doesnot guarantee virtue, as seen in humans and animals. Contrary to pure individualistic approaches, he emphasized that cooperation is a key to live in communities incorporating source and technique that must be transmitted through essential knowledge. Additionally, he stated that the only way forward for a successful educator ensuring maximum liberty is a mechanism of check and balance. The author concluded by saying that apart from personal growth, education must also equip children with intellectual and moral tools that are beneficial for society.
