Indus Water Treaty is an international binding agreement signed between India and Pakistan. According to agreement, the Eastern rivers were given to India while the Western rivers were given in control to Pakistan. India was not allowed to build any water projects on the Western rivers. Similarly, she was not allowed to use the Western water for her domestic, agricultural and industrial purposes. It is a bilateral agreement means no country can withdraw without other country agree upon it. If any dispute regarding the use of Indus water occurs then there will be the Court of Arbitration to resolve dispute between India and Pakistan. Currently, India unilaterally withdraw the agreement greatly impact the agriculture sector of Pakistan. About more than 50% water decreases occur in Chamab river which barren Chemab based lands. India accused that climate change like changing monsoon
