D- Conclusion

The modern international organizations came into existence in the aftermath of the two world wars. After World War I, the League of Nations was established in 1919 under the Treaty of Versailles. However, it failed to serve its purpose of averting WWII on account of numerous factors. Consequently, it was dissolved and succeeded by the United Nations in 1945. The UN has various organs such as General Assembly, Security Council, and the International Court of Justice, with many other specialized agencies such as the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. International organizations are entities having legal authority to coordinate with states of the world to address issues of mutual concerns and inter-state disputes. Their primary objectives include, promoting peace and stability across the world, abating illiteracy, poverty, and hunger, and ensuring fundamental human rights. Nevertheless, these international organizations have failed to serve their purpose of protecting humanity. The shattering global peace, the augmenting illiteracy, poverty, and hunger, and the human rights violations stand testimony to their failure. Ultimately, while the sole purpose of international organizations is to protect humanity, they have failed to serve their objective and the global dynamics stand testimony to their failure.

Overall, while the objective of international organizations is protecting humanity, they have failed to do so and the worldwide developments are testaments of their failure. The primary responsibilities of these organizations are ensuring fundamental human rights, ascertaining environmental friendly and sustainable development, and implementing the international law among many other. Unfortunately, they have failed to fulfil their duty. The persistent human rights violations, failure to ensure sustainable economic development, and failure to implement international law are all telling evidences of international organizations' failure. These organizations necessitate an immediate overhaul. They ought to become economically independent and uphold an impartial ^{approach} in order to ensure the protection of humanity in both letter and spirit.
