Title:- "power of love over rules".

Modern educational theorists prioritize non-interference with the children over lovely behavior. Loving the children unconditionally, would ensure the acceptance of suggestions and prohibitions without any resistance from them. The real love only exists in liking the children without <sup>having</sup> any conditional bond with them. Teachers with this quality enjoy the ultimate bond. But unfortunately, overburdened teachers only consider education as a profession. <sup>they</sup> I think that maintaining friendly ties with children would compromise discipline. Children shouldn't be treated with excessive rulings, as no rule can substitute for love.
