

WHY I WANT TO BECOME A CSP OFFICER

I want to become CSP officer because it's the best job in Pakistan. Becoming a CSP officer comes with a lot of perks, but the most important being the job security. Being a government job, it is protected against the instability which is an unfortunate aspect of private sector jobs. Individuals spend years of their lives slaving away for big corporations but they are laid off without a second thought. For instance, mass layoffs were witnessed during Covid-19 pandemic by big corporations like Amazon, where they laid off 27k+ people from their work force. In Pakistan's context, where government support programs are virtually non-existent, sudden layoffs can have a devastating effect on people's lives. Furthermore, Pakistan is a deeply patriarchal society and women remain severely under-represented from the workforce. But more alarming is the fact that a lot of women lack the protection they need to work safely in their respective jobs. For instance, female doctors in Pakistan face serious threats to their safety from aggrieved

Bring coherence to your ideas while shifting from one idea to another one Avoid using contraction families of their patients, making it difficult to work without fear. As a CSP officer, this risk is drastically mitigated.

by the authority that the position carries, which acts as a deterrent against such threats. Moreover, the most distinguishing feature about becoming a CSP officer is being the first in line of providing relief to ordinary people.

As I aspire to join the police service of Pakistan, the idea of helping people provides me with great personal fulfillment. Relief can be provided in many forms like giving charity or creating inclusive and supportive policies.

Yet, the most immediate and often greatest relief is provided by our police services. No matter the issue, the doors of the police services are ~~open~~ open 24/7 to those in need of help. Being in that position would not only enable me to serve my community, but also provide the personal fulfillment I deeply crave. Hence, these are some of the key reasons why I consider becoming a CSP officer to be one of the most coveted jobs in Pakistan.