

| (II) Attempt ALL questions from PART-II.

Q.2 Write a precis of the following passage in about 100 words and suggest a suitable title. (20+5)

Of all the characteristics of ordinary human nature envy is the most unfortunate; not only does the envious person wish to inflict misfortune and do so whenever he can with impunity, but he is also himself rendered unhappy by envy. Instead of deriving pleasure from what he has, he derives pain from what others have. If he can, he deprives others of their advantages, which to him is as desirable as it would be to secure the same advantages himself. If this passion is allowed to run riot it becomes fatal to all excellence, and even to the most useful exercise of exceptional skill. Why should a medical man go to see his patients in a carriage when the labourer has to walk to his work? Why should the scientific investigator be allowed to spend his time in a warm room when others have to face the inclemency of the elements? Why should a man who possesses some rare talent of great importance to the world be saved from the drudgery of his own housework? To such questions envy finds no answer. Fortunately, however, there is in human nature a compensating passion, namely that of admiration. Whoever wishes to increase human happiness must wish to increase admiration and to diminish envy.

What cure is there for envy? For the saint there is the cure of selflessness, though even in the case of saints envy of other saints is by no means impossible. But, leaving saints out of account, the only cure for envy in the case of ordinary men and women is happiness, and the difficulty is that envy is itself a terrible obstacle to happiness.

But the envious man may say: 'What is the good of telling me that the cure for envy is happiness? I cannot find happiness while I continue to feel envy, and you tell me that I cannot cease to be envious until I find happiness.' But real life is never so logical as this. Merely to realize the causes of one's own envy and feeling is to take a long step towards curing them.

C.S.S prece 2010.

Curbng Envy through happiness.

Envy is the most regrettable human trait. It compels individuals to desire others' misery. They become disconsolate about what others have while undervaluing what they themselves possess. Consequently, they may attempt to deprive others of their advantage even without gaining any benefit. Such behaviour is detrimental to human excellence. To cure envy, one must seek happiness through admiration. However, for the envious, seeking happiness might be an arduous task. In fact, identifying the root cause of envy is the first step towards overcoming it.

Total words = 300

In prece = 88.

main idea is picked and discussed
over all content is fine

replace circled words with simple vocab

need improvement

over all satisfied with the basics

8/20