

Read the following passage and answer the questions given at the end.

Language may have developed because of competition. Primitive language was used to give warning signals during hunting, to dominate territory to the disadvantage of other tribes, to voice different sounds. Human beings have a hereditary facility for language. It is claimed that computers can learn to communicate with us. But they respond only to the programmes fed into them. Babies learn language rapidly. Anxious parents try to teach language but children have innate ability to arrange complex sounds into sensible communication.
