

The West Enjoys Clean Environment by Exporting pollution to Developing countries

↳ Argumentative Topic

Outline

1. Introduction:

Is the thesis statement correct?
Structure ??

↳ Thesis Statement: The evidence proves that west systematically exports pollution abroad, whereas, some claim that it is not a deliberate process. However, the west is actually enjoying the clean environment and developing countries are grappling with intense pollution.

2. The Hidden Divide Global Environmental Burdens

3. Evidence of Pollution Export by West to the Developing Countries (Thesis)

- a. Western nations offshore dirtiest manufacturing to developing countries
- b. Toxic waste - chemical, plastics, electronics - is dumped in the Global South
- c. Carbon emissions are outsourced through global supply chains.
- d. Strict environmental regulations at home push industries abroad
- e. Western nations exploit weak environmental laws in developing nations

4. Why Some Claim Pollution Export isn't Deliberate (Antithesis)

- a. Offshoring is driven by cheap labour, not deliberate pollution export.
- b. Waste export follows international agreements, not exploitation
- c. Outsourced emissions reflect the increased manufacturing in developing countries, not western manipulation

→ Hook:

Like a fox hides pith in another's garden, the west is exporting its waste, harmful emissions and dirty industries abroad. The developing countries are unknowingly inheriting the poisoned soil, water, and air, while the fox is enjoying a spotless and fragrant home. The evidence proves that west systematically exports pollution abroad whereas, some claim that it is not a deliberate process. However, the west is actually enjoying the clean environment and developing countries are grappling with intense pollution.

→ Thesis Statement:

GIST of Outline:

Western nations offshore dirty manufacturing, dumps toxic waste ^{and} outsourced emissions by applying strict environmental regulations at home and exploiting weak environmental standards abroad. But some claim that this isn't a deliberate process. The offshoring is driven by cheap labor, waste export follows international laws, ^{and} outsourced emissions reflect growth in manufacturing of developing countries. The strict environmental regulations in the west aim to protect their citizens and developing countries have sovereign choice over accepting polluting industries. A closer look reveals that west has only shifted the dirtiest industry abroad due to the strict environmental compliance at home. It is actually the western demand that drives emissions abroad. In the guise of exporting recyclable waste, they ship non-recyclable and illegally mixed waste. The acceptance ^(by the) of all these activities by poor nation stems from economic pressure and not informed environmental choices.

Remark on Introduction para??