

"A Trip to Qualla Boundary"

Last May, I was confused to choose vacation spot. Flights were common to tourist countries but I wanted a spot with less ~~crowd~~ crowd. I became excited when my friend John suggested me to visit Oklawaha City Cherokee. I agreed and we went to Qualla Boundary, a small town of Cherokee. There we faced language barrier but natives helped us to reach souvenir shop. A young man, known as George, greeted us. In conversation, he told us that he tourist guide but previously he used to be wood cutter. This gave us idea that here locals have other sources of income than tourism. "Bingo Weekend" is one of them where people play different sports and locals earn from it. Our final destination was art museum which displayed
