Behind closed doors and in dimly lit alleyways across Pakistan, a silent crisis is unfolding, one that shatters families, fuels crime, and erodes the very foundations of the nation's future. This crisis is the alarming increase in drug abuse that the country is currently facing. Once mainly used as a transit route for global narcotics, Pakistan has unfortunately become a major consumer market, with millions now suffering from addiction. Understanding the causes and consequences is essential for finding effective solutions. Increasing use of drugs is mainly due to psychological and emotional problems, easily availability of drugs, lack of awareness and ineffective law enforcement. This results in physical and emotional health problems, increase in crime rates, youth destruction and unemployment, and family disintegration.
