Title: Colonial Impacts on Cultural Faultlines

Human Culture has two strands:

the ideological and the formal. Both formulate a social setup because one complements the other.

They also influence the social structure and are itself amended by social structure. Cultural issues are linked with changes in the social issues. The issues of third-world are to be understood in light of social issues of economic and political nature. Issues in Asia, Africa and Latin America are due to stagnant economic growth because of colonial agendas of the East Countries. They were feudal and tribal societies and their development stopped due to aristocratic class and political domination.

Both societies were engaged in feuds and this division was fueled by colonial divide. Colonialism further divided them in between and against their rivals and this is the legacy of colonial masters to the newly independent states. (136)
