

M T W T F S

• Democracy is a Culture Rather than a Process.

OUTLINE

1. Introduction

Hook

Background

Thesis Statement: Democracy lives through people's values and attitudes, not only through laws and elections.
It grows when citizens practice respect, tolerance, and participation in daily life.

2. Understanding the Concept of Democracy

2.1 Democracy as a Process

- Regular elections, rule of law and political representation.

2.2 Democracy as a Culture

- A shared belief in freedom, respect and dialogue.

3. Importance of Democratic Culture

3.1 True Democracy Requires Democratic Mindset

3.2 Culture Ensures Continuity Beyond Elections

3.3 Strong Democratic Culture Prevents Authoritarian Drift

3.4 Culture Builds Accountability and Participation

4. Consequence of Ineak Democratic Culture.

- 4.1 Elections without spirit of Democracy
- 4.2 Lack of tolerance and dialogue
- 4.3 Weak civic values undermine rule of law.

5. Building a Democratic culture

- 5.1 Role of education and civil awareness
- 5.2 Media and Civil Society as cultural shapers
- 5.3 Family and community values

6. Conclusion.

Introduction:

Many nations proudly hold elections and claim to be democratic, but only a few truly live by the spirit of democracy. Democracy is not only about casting votes or forming governments; it is about how people think, behave and treat one another.

The success of democracy depends more on the attitudes and values of citizens than on the procedures of the political system.

Throughout history, countries like Norway and Canada have shown that democracy thrives where people value equality, tolerance and participation. Their citizens respect opposing views, follow rules, and hold their leaders accountable. Their political strength comes from democratic culture, not just from constitutions. On the other hand, many developing nations, like Pakistan struggle with weak democratic cultures. In such societies, elections are often reduced to a formality, while corruption, intolerance and misuse of power continue. For example, in some states, political leaders win votes through manipulation because citizens fail to question them or engage responsibility. This shows that without democratic values, democratic institutions cannot function effectively. Education, civic awareness, and responsible media play a key role in building a democratic culture. When people learn to respect differences, follow laws, and cooperate for the common good, democracy becomes part of their daily life. True democracy does not survive only in parliaments or courts; it lives in the minds and actions of citizens. Hence, Democracy lives through people's values and attitudes, not only through laws and elections. It grows in the citizens' practice of respect, tolerance and participation in daily life.

Give more pertinent points in

Democracy as a culture

Promotion of strong institutions

Devolution of power

Focus on literacy and education

Freedom of opinion

Secondly introduction should be of one paragraph better to start with the hook

Don't write such things that are not mentioned in the outline