

Title: Importance of Nature in Greek Minds.

Greeks were always reluctant to put natural beauty on papers, which was in great abundance. They perceived dense forests and fierce mountains as their enemy because they view wild animals a potential threat to their social life. They would always fear mountains in the times of earthquakes as they would devastate everything. Pointing towards Homer city, ~~author wrote that~~ those people named sea as wasteland.

However, ~~when~~ they understood they became dependent on it. ~~Later on~~, when Greeks went to bury cities for imperial purpose, they began to experience the pollution of sound and air. They started recelling to rural life. They began to miss the silence and beauty of what they ^{were} complaining. Therefore, imagining the scenery of nature, they took pen and wrote poetry, prose and novels. ~~writer~~ ~~said that~~ it was the period of Alexander.
