

Title : The Human Right to Enjoy The Gifts of Nature

Précis : Along with land, nature also freely provides air, sunlight, and water to human beings. So that they can enjoy these resources without any restrictions. Any law that prohibits people from using these resources, puts their lives in danger and leads to social disparity.

Total Words : 169

Précis : 43

No need to add transition from your own
Don't skip ideas .

Man is a land animal. Land has been freely provided by nature, therefore, a man if he is to enjoy his right to live, must not be impeded in the free use and enjoyment of this basic element. Air, sunshine, and water are other elements essential to his existence, freely provided by nature, and the enjoyment of these also must not be hindered by any man-made laws. To refuse to some men the right to use freely any of natural elements is to endanger their lives. The Judaic law says : "Thou shalt not kill." This implies the right of all men to live. Therefore, any law made by man, though it may be a law enforced by Government authority, which denies to any human beings the right to use freely and fully nature's gifts, thereby endangering their lives, is breaking a basic moral law, and is indeed designated by many of the most profound religious and philosophic thinkers as "the original sin which gave rise to social injustice."

***