Introduction:

"We do not inherit the Earth from our ancestors; we borrow it from our children."

- The famous American proverb reflects regret over how modern actions have harmed the once balanced environment of earlier centuries. In ancient agricultural societies, people used the organic farming and crop rotation, which kept the soil healthy and reduce waste. Early communities relied also on renewable energy sources like wind for sailing and water-mills for grinding grains, causing minimal environmental harm. In the present times climate is drastically changing because of several factors. Individuals started activities that vanish the beauty of life. Unburned fuel emission from industries is harming the habitants of the Earth. Timber necessities fulfilled by the woods is damaging the forests. Consequently, the land will no longer be the place to live. Water will become poison for living and non living beings and atmosphere will not allow biotic and abiotic components to breathe. Hence, it is a dire need to steer climate friendly steps in order to make the world a happy place to live.
