

As children, we love heroes, as adults,
we understand villains

1. Introduction

Significant factors prove that perspectives are dynamic: as children love heroes while the adults understand villains. However, there are certain elements that help one not to become a villain.

2. Dynamic nature of perspectives: Childhood vs Adulthood

- (i) Children chase complete freedom but adults understand why restrictions are necessary
- (ii) Children pursue happiness but adults understand why sorrows exist
- (iii) Children validate materialism but adults understand necessity of simplicity
- (iv) Children appreciate braveness but adults know the need of cowardice
- (v) Children love defence forces but adults understand militancy

3. Certain elements that help in balancing one's perspective in not becoming a villain:

(i) Role of family

(ii) Role of education.

(iii) Role of religion

(iv) Role of society

4. Conclusion.

There are significant factors that prove perspectives are dynamic in nature: as children love heroes while the adults understand villains. However, there are certain elements that help one in not becoming a villain. A child with weak physical appearance, thin bones entangled with few muscles, wants to eliminate all the boys with larger frames, who bully him. He thinks their elimination is the only heroic way to bring justice to the victims - including himself. However, when he grows into an adult; his childhood's fire of vengeance for being bullied.

in childhood and his inability to do justice due to his physical limitation sparks a negative thought in his mind that he should bully others since there was no justice at his time of being bullied. Here, he understands that why there were bullies at the first place. In the similar way, complete freedom and happiness are chased but later the meaning of restrictions and sorrows are understood. Moreover, perspectives keep changing from materialism to simplicity, braveness to sometimes cowardice and from defence forces justified actions to the understanding of root cause of military, all this happens with grooming and understanding. Which enables us to balance ~~to~~ one to position himself rightly between the two extremes. The role of family, education, religion and the society are the key elements to phase out the negative influences in ones life.