Introductory Paragraph.

"The first time you take a drug, After that, the drug chooses you."

This powerful saying reflects the disastrous reality of our modern world, where drug use has become a silent epidemic spreading accross all ages and societies. In the fast-moving, stressful life of today, many individuals especially the youth turn to drugs seeking relief, excitement, or escape from reality. The influence of peers, the glamour shown in media and the easy access of drugs have made the problem even worse. As a result, addiction is destroying health, families, and futures. Thus, the rising use of drugs in the modern age is mainly caused by social pressure, stress, and easy access, leading to health issues, family problems, and social problems; only through education, awareness, strong law enforcement, and rehabilitation centers we can overcome this growing issue.
