Title : "A trip to Cherokee"

The writer found it hard to choose a destination for his vacation. Full stop his desire to spend vacations in a peaceful place came to be true when he sat for an Oklahoma country Cherokee following the suggestion of John. They visited a shop carrying several articles and met the English-speaking shopkeeper. Previously a woodcutter the shopkeeper told the writer how busy he remained during the tourist season which is when off-loads people to find other means of livelihood. One of them is being a weekend which brings people to play and win money in a big hall. The writer prices to visit another place after enjoying the Museum of Qualla band as his trip's last stop.
