Socio-Cultural Problems and Imperialism

culture of a society has two aspects: internal and external.

It is social constructed and has a link with human psychology.

The occurrence of social change is attributed by modification in external structure. Socio-cultural problems can not study without exploration of imperialism in third world. Imperialism in South-Asia had produced classed based societies, which curbed the social and cultural progress. Similarly, the cultural development of developing nations had compromised due to lack of political sovereignty. Hence, this political and social structure of former colonies generates the colonial mindset.
