No need to bombard with quotes

When bombs fall silent, it is the media's voice that echoes across the world.

As Aeschylus once said, "In war, truth is the first casualty". The ongoing Palestine - Israel war is one of the most covered yet most misunderstood conflicts in modern history. Beyond the battlefield another war unfolds - a war of information, narratives and global perception shaped by media. From television screens to social media platforms, images of destruction, grief, and resistance circulate rapidly, influencing the perspective of people. The dominant Western media usually conceals the true scope of damage and carnage in the Gaza war. Biased headlines often downplay the suffering of Palestinians, or even justify act of violence against them. Social media has emerged as a powerful force by posting real-time updates. On Instagram, Facebook, Twitter have given voice to everyday people, increased awareness & spurred conversation across the world.

yet this powerful tool can also distort reality when used bias → propaganda or selective reporting. The media serves as a bridge between war zones and international audiences, exposing humanitarian crisis and calling attention to injustices. In the Palestine-Israel conflict the media becomes not just messenger but a participant which is capable of amplifying truth or concealing it. Therefore, the role of media in this war is both enlightening and controversial, as it holds the power to awaken global conscience or to manipulate it for political purposes. The media doesn't just show the war — it shapes the world's conscience.
