Title: Freedom in Education

There are three main schools of thought with regards to freedom in education. One group <sup>claims</sup> says that the children should be given complete freedom however they may be. The second group <sup>views</sup> says they should be under complete authority, and the third <sup>believes</sup> says they should be free but good. The third group, who believes in Rousseauism, has more supporters. The writer does not hold their belief that education is only for suitable environments because it ignores the importance of education. The communities co-exist because of science and technique provided by education. The successful educators who allow freedom are a result of proper education. Therefore, the education must provide moral and intellectual resources as well as the opportunity for growth.
