The author claims that scientific method is the only reliable method. It provides strong basis for beliefs. Moreover, conclusions are drawn on the basis of facts. This is a continuous process where new facts are being tested on the basis of experiment. Not only this but it also provides evidence crucial for new researchers.

(02)

Although, conclusions are drawn on the basis of evidence but they should not be considered final. These conclusions are further tested by other researchers and they may provide quite different conclusions. So, this cycle goes on.

(03)

According to the author, it is vital to abandon the scientific method in certain circumstances. As it often relies on slow proceedings, ignoring evidence and bounded/rigid conclusions. Therefore, in case of big problems/emergencies in life, the conclusions are drawn in advance of the evidence.

(04)

The basis of "intuitive judgment" is different from that of scientific decision in the sense it relies on belief/faith. It is crucial/helpful in the cases where researcher is not certain about findings. He believes in his own judgment power. On the other hand, the scientific research is based on facts and evidence rather than personal views.
