The advent of the technology revolution in the 21st century has brought a shift in the domain of learning and education. The conventional spectrum of learning, once the dominant medium of instruction, is no longer the potential instrument to educate the young mind. Norma an orphan of 13 years, was expelled from her school due to unpaid dues.

She availed internet facility and connected with enormous learning material available on youtube.

The final result astonished to everyone as she topped in board. This is prime alteration that online medium. Is this the last generation that can taste classroom learning? This question carries not only the dying legacy of old tradition of learning but also envisages a stage for an even more potential learning challenge. Online learning is more convenient and effective in term of convenience, its all time availability, unrestricted accessibility and elimination of orthodox restrictions, have made it a sought-after medium of learning. Similarly, it is safe.

Students from hectic learning writing routine, need for infrastructural operators and compliance with strict schedule. However, its effectiveness is gauged by its potential in enforcing the true equality, absolute accessibility and retentive efficiency. Having said that, it is important to note that conventional learning is still not a redundant instrument. Due to its application in inculcating discipline and phrasing communication skill. In short, online learning is deemed convenient and effective due to viable features; however, conventional education is still relevant today.
