Last May, the writer decided to spend his holidays in an uncrowded and quite place. Though initially puzzled, the writer instantly agreed to his friends suggestion of visiting Cherokee. By flight they reached Qualla Boundary - a scenic town that was a manifestation of Cherokees past. With the help of natives, the writer and his friend made their way to souvenir shops. While skimming through crafts they were greeted by a middle-aged native named John. Through him they were educated that trade was not the only means of income there in Cherokee rather during off-season, Cherokees earned by conducting games at a mass level.

~~Lastly, the writer enjoyed his trip.~~ Their final stop was a museum that displayed Cherokees past. The writer thoroughly enjoyed his trip and was eager for another one soon.
