Civil Service: From Service to Status

Precis:

Once, civil service of Pakistan was considered as a profession to serve the public. But now it is a blend of survival, status and respect. Many candidates pursue it for job security and power, which private sector does not offer. While others take exam success not merely a path to stable career but as a measurement of personal worth. At present times, the ~~bureaucrats~~ ^{officers} have moved beyond the ~~feet~~ ^{routine} clothes to project themselves on social media, portraying a glamorous lifestyle.

alongside the captions of serving the nation. While such imaging of the service inspire and attract youth. But it also risks diverting attention from the demanding realities of the field. In a society where appearance matters more than performance, the display of authority can play as powerful as its actual exercise.
