"A nation is great not by size alone. It is the will, the cohesion, the stamina, the principle of its people and the quality of their leaders that ensure it an honourable place in the World", Lee Kuan Yew, The Founding Father of Modern ~~Govt~~ Singapore. These words reflect the timeless truth that nation's progress is not measured by the size of its population or resources. Rather it is the vision of leaders and discipline of citizens that makes nations great. For the last seven decades, Pakistan is grappling with multiple socio-economic and environmental challenges. Ineffective policies and weak institutions have only enasperated the already vulnerable economy. Therefore, to overcome the perils of social, economic and environmental disasters, it is critical to build national consensus on key national issues by accommodating the interests of all state actors. This is only possible through redefining public policies and national interests, investing in human development index, fostering foreign investments possible through strong diplomacy and active media contribution, by addressing the challenges of security and militancy and promotion of sports, tourism, agri-reforms, export diversification, SDCs, energy efficiency and recognition of climate change as national emergency.
